day afternoon and captured Akana and his two assistants, who have been occupying themselves with distilling okolic hao for some time past.

Akana was just leaving his distillery when the officers arrived. He was taken back, and then began a systematic search.

The place was not hidden, but was set immediately in a deep gulch, very difficult of access. One of the best distilling outfits ever discovered on the island of Oahu was found in the place. Eight hogsheads of fermenting tea root were found distributed about the place. Eight hogsheads of fermenting tea root were found distributed about the place. These were immediately destroyed. A search among the bushes brought to light a half dozen empty demijohns. Very little okolehau was found, even upon searching Akana's house, situated about a mile away.

For a long time it has been a matter of wonder to a great many people living in Kalihi how their neighbors suctored.
